ABSTRACT

Since the implementation of the Vocational Education Law on May 1, 2022, China has paid great attention to the development of vocational education. The law points out that vocational education should be put in the first place, and competent enterprises should be encouraged to establish higher vocational colleges and vocational education training bases, so as to jointly cultivate technical talents in various forms and provide a large number of talent reserves for China's economic development.

Vocational education has been developing in China for many years. Its main way of cultivating talents is the modern apprenticeship system. It is a teacher-student relationship established from the actual production process and teaches students' professional skills by teaching them by words and examples. This paper mainly analyzes the national policies and the development of China's Vocational Education in recent years. It is found that vocational education in China has been recovered and revitalized. The state has given a lot of policy encouragement and positive guidance to make China's vocational education develop to the current level. However, everything has its disadvantages. Although higher vocational colleges have made some achievements in school enterprise cooperation, there are still many problems.

Through a large number of research data analysis, combing and analyzing the key problems existing in school-enterprise cooperation, this paper puts forward the methods and ways to solve the bottleneck problems affecting the process of vocational education talent training.
